Top New York Cases To Watch In 2019

Big cases often find their homes in New York, and the coming year will be no different. President Donald Trump's campaign-season and charitable conduct have come under legal assault, former Hollywood kingpin Harvey Weinstein faces sexual assault charges and alleged systemic corruption in college basketball will go before a jury. Here, Law360 provides a rundown of some Empire State cases attorneys will be closely watching in 2019. Read full article »

Financial Services Litigation To Watch In 2019

On the horizon for the financial services industry in the new year are cases that will turn up the heat on the debate over the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau's constitutionality, test the legality of the much-vaunted fintech banking charter and potentially increase the number of lawsuits from homeowners fighting foreclosure. Here, Law360 examines the cases that experts most often singled out for their potential impact on the industry. Read full article »

NYC Real Estate Legislation, Regulation To Watch In 2019

Rezoning in various neighborhoods and the question of short-term rentals are among the areas of regulation and legislation that real estate lawyers in New York will be watching in 2019. Read full article »

Sports Cases To Watch In 2019

After 2018 brought an end to some major long-standing legal disputes in sports, such as a U.S. Supreme Court ruling that opened the door for sports betting, the new year is set to see more developments and potential resolutions to many other significant sports legal cases. Here, Law360 takes a look at sports law cases attorneys to watch in 2019. Read full article »
